
Privacy statement

This privacy statement as a way of showing that we regard your privacy as an extremely serious matter. The following is an explanation of how we handle personal information

All data collected by Winetraining Online will be stored in strict confidence and will not be loaned, leased or sold, nor made public in any other way. Any information that you give to Winetraining Online will be treated with the utmost of care.

Winetraining Online aim in registering personal data is to be able to supply our visitors with customised editorial and commercial information.

We use your IP address for processing problems with our server and for managing our sites. The IP address is also used to recognise visitors.

Our sites make use of so-called cookies. Cookies consist of standard internet technology that enables us to store and unlock certain login information on the user's system. Cookies cannot be used to identify persons, only machines. Every visitor can adjust his/her computer to ensure that no cookies are accepted.

Our registration forms ask users to provide us with both personal and professional information (such as name, address, e-mail and position).

We are not accountable either for the privacy practices or for the content of such sites.

In exceptional cases Winetraining Online will share information with carefully chosen partners so that we are more able to fulfill your wants. You will always be informed about this.

Some of our sites provide our visitors with communities and forums. All information that is revealed at such places becomes part of the public domain. You should exercise caution with regard to the information that you reveal in such places.

Winetraining Online uses security techniques in order to avoid information being lost, mutilated or subject to any other form of impairment.

Winetraining Online will, in response to a request, remove any registered visitor (and his or her personal data) from our database. Visitors can also adjust and alter their data online.
